FINDING the best childcare for your young ones can be one of the biggest decisions parents have to make.

The fact that more women are returning to work after having children means that there is now a greater demand for quality childcare.

There are many day nurseries and registered childminders available, but they must meet with the approval of the Local Authority and comply with stringent vetting and inspection regulations.

Services offered by individual care facilities can vary. Some private day nurseries are happy to take babies from as young as eight weeks old up to school age. Others place a minimum age limit of around two years old.

Registered childminders have individual preferences when it comes to setting minimum age requirements but are generally quite flexible.

So how does a parent choose the right care for their child? The first thing to do is decide on the kind of care you want for your child.

A registered childminder will provide an environment closely resembling that of home.

It is unlikely that she will be caring for more than two or three other children, but she may also have children of her own at home.

for your little ones

A day nursery, on the other hand, offers a broader spectrum of childcare. The children are usually divided into small groups according to age, which means that the children take part in activities that are relevant to their ability.

And being with a number of other children can often be a bonus when it comes to developing social skills.

The day is carefully planned to take in a wide range of activities. Weather permitting, outdoor play is an essential element in the daily schedule; it helps physical co-ordination and the exercise is beneficial.

Children derive great pleasure from creating their own pictures and no childminder or nursery should be without drawing, painting and modelling materials. Construction toys are a perennial favourite and help to develop manual dexterity as well as imagination.

Many nurseries now have a computer with the appropriate software for a pre-schooler's first look at technology.

The final decision comes down to personal choice and is usually reached after visiting as many local facilities as possible.

These will give a general feel of the atmosphere, numbers, play facilities and perhaps, most importantly an idea of the people behind them.

After all, they will be responsible for your child's safety, happiness and well-being.

EVERSLEY NURSERY SCHOOL

32 Penkett Road, Wallasey • Tel: 0151 638 0004

Dear Mummy and Daddy

I am having a lovely time here at Eversley Nursery School.

Today I played in the sand and water down on the lovely beach that Rachael made and then we ate ice cream in the beach hut cafe in the role-play corner.

We had cowboy pie for lunch and then Hayley read us a story. It was great fun!

My friend Jack would love it here!
